Money is the great motivation, the carrot that makes the donkey go, the grain that waits at the end of the maze. If you want increased productivity from your employees, give them a raise. The man in the street nods approvingly at this bit of folk wisdom, and management, which should know better, nods just as approvingly. There is yet another bit of wisdom that directly contradicts the first maxim, but when the donkey and the carrot are trotted out, it remains forgotten. No one remembers that a wise man once said, "man does not leave by bread alone." And in spite of all the donkeys that plod after their carrots, in spite of all the rats that learn to pick their ways through elaborate mazes, it remains the more
